

Among the Churches
Universalist

After a year of successful work the Fourth Universalist Church, Quincy street, near Reid avenue, begins the work of the new church year with a promising prospect. Besides accomplishing substantial debt reduction and securing revenue adequate to pay all the bills, the church has steadily pushed out of the borders of its influence and the sources of its support. On Sunday morning the pastor's sermon will outline the wide range of influence and operation every live Christian church should occupy. The sermon will deal with more than the traditional ideas of the functions of a church, and should prove interesting to those who believe the church should be more potent in restraining vice and transforming the life of our cities. In the evening the sermon will aim to help those who find the cares and labors of life unduly heavy. The subject will be "The Right Way to Carry Heavy Burdens." Everyone will find a cordial welcome in our home-like church.
