Death of Mae Allum

It is with sadness we read of the death of Mae Allum, who passed away at her home on the state road Friday night. She had been a sufferer for the past nine months with tuberculosis, of which disease she died. A little more than a year ago no future looked brighter than hers, as she seemed to be in perfect health. She had the grip and did not recover from it. She had been employed as a stenographer for a firm in Granville for about three years and also spent a few months in the office of A. C. Bartlett of Chicago. Deceased was born in Salisbury 22 years ago. The surviving near relatives are her father, mother, one sister, Mrs. B. Nellis, and her grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth Allum, all living here. The funeral was held Sunday at her late home, Rev. M. G. [Milo Garfield] Folsom [Universalist] officiating, assisted by Rev. O. E. Raymond. The friends here gave a beautiful pillow and wreath to show their esteem. The bearers were Ed and John Gow of Dolgeville, and Frank Corey and Ferd Briggs from here.
