DEATHS.

At his residence, in the town of Lyme, Jefferson county, on March 9th, ROE MINOR, in the 57th year of his age. Mr. Minor was a native of Connecticut, but had resided in this county twenty-one years. He formerly united with a Baptist church, and continued with them in fellowship for nine years; but in the year 1817, the writer of this article made his first visit in this county,...and Mr. Minor, with many others, listened with joyful attention to the words of life and salvation, and shortly after publicly professed his belief in a world's salvation. For seventeen years past he had continued firm in the faith of the restitution of all things. Many of his neighbors often stated to him that his sentiments would do to live by, but fail him in the hour of death. But in his last sickness, which was a dropsical disease, and very distressing, he retained his reason to the last, and had the satisfaction of stating, in his last moment, to his opposers, the firmness of his faith. He directed his family to send for the writer of this article to attend his funeral, and selected 1 Cor. xv:52-55 as the text for his funeral sermon.—The consolations of the Gospel were tendered to the widow and mourning children and relatives, before a solemn and devout congregation, from the above mentioned text, by
