

[Turner, Carrie]

MISS CARRIE TURNER

The death of Miss Carrie Turner in her home in Macedon on January 4 is one of the events in life so difficult to realize. She had been ill for a period of six months but fully expected to recover and resume her work as a teacher in the public school. Her friend, Mrs. Ina G. C. Klock of Fairport, writes as follows:

"The Universalist Church of Macedon and the community were bereft of a devoted helper and a staunch friend in the passing of Miss Carrie Turner on January 4. Miss Turner was a life-long resident of Macedon. Forty-eight of her years were spent in teaching its children. A generation grew up in the warmth of her friendship and the influence of her noble character. She was a faithful member of the Universalist Church from her girlhood, becoming a central figure in it to be relied upon for all duties, great or small, and performing with equal cheerfulness.

"She is survived by two sisters, Miss Anna Turner and Miss Elizabeth Turner, who lived with her in the family home. She made a real home for its members and this was the best loved of her activities. She was a great lady embodying a noble spirit. She has earned Mrs. Browning's award, 'God's license to be missed.' "

The Rev. Harry M. Wright of Bristol conducted the memorial service, assisted by Nicholas Salao, student minister of the church. Mr. Wright was minister of this church when Miss Turner was a child in the church school.
